San Bernardine, Cal., Nov. 21.— The seedless lemon, which botanical experts have unsuccessfully sought for many years, has been discovered here. A revolution in the lemon is expected to result.

The bud wood from which trees now bearing the seedless lemons have been grown came from a sample pro-vided by the department of agriculvided by the department of agricul-ture a number of years ago. Twelve trees, all of which grow lemons with-out a sign of seed, form part of a grove owned by I. E. Busb of Rialto. Government experts have pronounced them the only seediess lemon trees known to exist in the entire world.
